

Sample SOP for Nursing in Australia

Nursing is a noble profession, and my empathetic nature has obliged me to embrace a career in nursing. Since childhood, I nurtured the intention to become a nurse, and this motivation significantly moulded my academic and professional profiles. A career in nursing calls for knowledge in the field of healthcare, tenacity, and the inclination to work for the betterment of patients' health. Banking on my virtues of empathy and sympathy, I have selected nursing as my professional field. Now that I have already completed my Bachelor's degree in Nursing from one of the reputed universities in India and also worked as a nurse for the last couple of years, I brace up to imbibe industry knowledge by completing a Master's program in the area of my interest. The University of Tasmania offers a 2-year Master's degree course in Nursing. I am keen to pursue this program in Australia.

It's fascinating to craft a better quality of life for others with care, and I find deep interest in my current profession as a staff nurse. Eyeing a greater career progression in India, I decided to pursue a globally accredited program that can bring me better opportunities in my homeland. As a learner, I remain open to acquiring fresh knowledge. Academically, I have performed consistently all these years. In 2015 and 2017, I cleared my Secondary and Higher Secondary Examinations in India, aggregating 89% and 82% marks, respectively. My inherent interest in the field of medicine and nursing intrigued me to embrace the Bachelor' degree in Nursing. I got myself admitted to NIMS University in Jaipur to pursue my graduation program. In 2020, I completed my B.Sc. in Nursing from this institute with a CGPA of 9.1.

My academic consistency and the appetite to learn helped me bag my first internship at AIIMS. Here, too, my diligence paid off, and after the initial couple of months, I was absorbed under the payroll of this esteemed institution. The last two years of my career have bestowed me with a valuable learning experience. Now that I am well-versed with my core competencies, I look forward to broaden my skillset by undergoing training through this internationally recognized program. At this stage of my career, a globally acknowledged program will streamline my professional profile. Back in India, I would get the opportunity to work with some of the leading healthcare institutes like Fortis Hospital, Apollo Hospitals, and Narayana Hospitals.

During my three-year bachelor' program, I developed my knowledge in both theoretical and practical areas of nursing. Some of the domains that appealed to me the most included community health nursing, midwifery and obstetrical nursing, and medical surgical nursing. While working at AIIMS, I got the opportunity to explore some of the new shores like mental health nursing and child health nursing. Thanks to the practical sessions at my college and two years of professional exposure, I got the opportunity to work in close collaboration with several reputed doctors. Besides, I attended critically ill patients at the hospital, and it was a pleasure for me to heal them back to health. Also, I gained hands-on experience while carrying out my responsibilities as a nurse. Currently, I stand at a crucial juncture of a dynamic career and a happening future. At this stage of my professional life, a Master's degree in Nursing will further spearhead my profile in India.

Deciding to study this program in Australia was a strategic one. I closely scanned the websites of the top institutions across the world across different countries. In Australia, I found some aspects in common. The academic curriculum that most of the institutes in this country offers is perfectly in sync with the healthcare industry. Advancements in the medical domain have been taking place rapidly across the world. However, in India, the research infrastructure is yet to take shape. Countries like Australia, the US, and the UK are far more advanced when it comes to medical research and nursing. Therefore, studying in one of these nations as a nurse would be a more logical decision for me. In Australia, the quality of training for nurses looks better than most other countries. Also, the affordability of the program, supportive academic infrastructure, and the opportunity to learn amidst a multicultural population in Australia are the other reasons for me to choose this country as my academic destination.

The University of Tasmania offers a course perfectly aligned with the industry. All the modules are relevant to the contemporary healthcare industry. This makes the learning outcome relevant to the aspirants. Now that I am well-versed with the basics, it's time for me to delve into the deeper areas of nursing. I look forward to establish myself as a senior nurse in the coming years. This would require me to master the managerial skills in nursing. Considering these priorities, I look forward to pursue this program in nursing at your revered institution in Australia.

After completing this program in Australia, I will return to India and tap my career opportunities as a skilled nurse. Besides, the demand for trained and certified nurses is high in the Middle East as well. After gaining further experience in India, I would like to walk in the managerial profile as a head nurse in one of the leading hospitals in India. Some of the hospitals that I would eye include Apollo Hospitals, Max Hospitals, Hiranandani Hospitals, Tata Memorial Hospital, and Fortis Hospital. Next, I might look forward to work beyond the borders and go for better-paying opportunities in the Middle East. So, my purpose of visiting Australia is solely academic, and I don't have any professional interest in the country. On completing this course, I am going to return to India and find a decent employment as a nurse.

I am looking forward to be a part of the progressive academic environment in Australia. Studying this course will put me on track of a happening career back in my homeland where I can embrace my dream profession as a head nurse.
